Find the Right Sources for Comparative Legal Research

Winner of the 2018 Foreign, Comparative & International Law Special Interest Section (FCIL-SIS) Award

Comparative legal research often means searching across publishers, formats, and resources to find materials covering the subjects and jurisdictions you need. Multinational Sources Compared brings that information together in one convenient finding aid.

Rather than searching publisher by publisher, researchers can identify relevant resources by subject or jurisdiction and quickly see what each resource covers.

What Researchers Will Find

Explore print and electronic treatises, comparative monographs, global guides, subscription databases, and more.

Subject Coverage

Identify resources addressing a particular area of law across multiple jurisdictions.

Jurisdiction Coverage

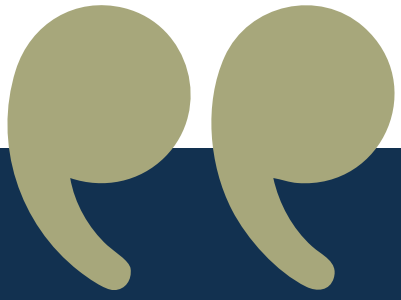
See which countries and jurisdictions are covered by a resource before tracking it down.

Detailed Bibliographic Information

Find author/editor, title, publisher, format, update frequency, ISBN/ISSN, and information about where electronic resources are available.

Resource Descriptions

Understand the topical scope of a work using information from the resource itself, publisher descriptions, tables of contents, sample chapters, and other available materials.



The subject headings and jurisdictions explored in this database cover a broad basis for comparative legal research. The sources selected for each subject or jurisdiction have been vetted by editors for their usefulness and comprehensiveness—they should help with both common and rare questions.
